HONGKONG, JANUARY 5TH, 1889.

As announced by us in a paragraph yesterday, the Hon. E. L. O'MALLEY, Attorney-General, with shortly go home on leave. The new Justice Judge will arrive at the end of this month, when Mr. A. J. LEACH, who has ably filled the acting appointment for the last two months, will leave the Bench, and it is understood that he will then be succeeded by the Attorney-General's locum tenens. It is said to be probable that the Hon. E. L. O'MALLEY will not return to the Colony, and that on the expiry of his leave the substantive appointment of Attorney-General will come vacant. Mr. E. J. ACKERLY, now a home on leave, is a candidate for the appointment, the vacancy having been anticipated for some time past, and it is believed he has a fair chance of securing it, though doubtless there will be candidates from other colonies. The change in the constituency of the office affords a favourable opportunity for raising the question whether the Attorney-General should be allowed private practice. We would not be surprised to learn that the question has already been considered by the Colonial Office, and that it has been decided that in all the Colonies private practice is in future to be allowed to law officers when new appointments are made. The point has recently been raised in England and a discussion took place upon it in the House of Commons. The question there was whether the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General of England should be allowed to practice in their own right. The Attorney-General intimated that the suggestion change would be made at an early date. In some of the Crown colonies private practice is already interdicted to the Attorney-General. The objections to the existing arrangement in this colony are obvious. With a large private practice the Attorney-General cannot give that undivided attention to his judicial duties that is desirable, while sometimes it may cut the other work and the interests of clients who have to sue. Only this week the Attorney-General had to ask for an early adjournment of the Supreme Court to enable him to attend the meeting of the Legislative Council. This might well have been the prolonging of the case by a day more than would otherwise be necessary for its conclusion, thus increasing the costs proportionately. That, however, is only a minor objection to the system; the real objection is that where private practice is allowed the colony cannot command the undivided services of the Attorney-General. Sometimes, too, in the course of civil business, matters containing the elements of criminal charge may crop up, and the Attorney-General is thereby placed in an embarrassing position. There is also the possibility that as a member of the Government he may have to advise on matters in which the interests of persons from whom he holds tenure are affected, and, however desirous he may be of discharging his duty impartially, an unconscious bias may affect his judgment. The Attorney-General, holding the position he does as Crown prosecutor and law adviser to the Governor, ought to be free from all possibility of private influence as a judge. As a matter of principle, there is, as well as on grounds of expediency, we hold that private practice should be disallowed.

The argument in favour of allowing it is that unless you give a very large salary you will not get a good man for the post. Applying this argument to Hongkong it is easy to put it to the test of figures. The Attorney-General receives a salary of $4,800. Mr. ACKERLY, as Registrar of the Supreme Court, Official Attorney, Official Administrator, and Registrar of Companies and Land Office receives $4,800, $240 as Official Trustee, and four as the Registrar of the Vice-Admiralty Court. The fees amounting to the latter office in a year will be a good deal of business, may amount to $200 or $300, but in other years they are not more than nominal; and as they do not get for pension and are not drawn up to fees, they are not worth as much as some amount of salary would be. A salary of $6,000 or more would probably induce Mr. ACKERLY to change his present position for that of Attorney-General if the present were offered to him, but even if the amount were made the same as the Postage Tax is set at, $3,120, the extra expense to the colony would not be more than the improvement in the system would be worth, and that sum would be quite sufficient good men as capable as the present minister from elsewhere if there were no candidate in the colony itself.

We have that the Mount Lebanon, Captain Nelson is about 40 miles from Tientsin and is fitting out his cargo.

Judge DUNN left Shanghai on the 26th December, and is en route for Peking.

In a Sunday morning, between 8 and 10 o'clock, the steam launch carrying the British will call alongs a small vessel holding 200 cwt. to convey men ashore to 10 a.m. service at St. Peter's Seaman's Church, returning about 12.30.

An enquiry has been made at the Magistrate's office regarding the death of a man who died in the Government Hospital, originally from the effect of a shot wound received in the left arm, in the late afternoon reported at No. 7 Police station.

It is announced in a Shanghai paper that at the capital of the Shanghai Land Investment Company, the former vice-president of the Chinese and English Bank, Mr. N. C. Daily, has died. His world was most gratifying not only to his own nation but without distinction to whatever country the members may be in, and we believe also to the local Chinese authorities.

A report was made at the Police Station on the 10th inst. by a doctor to the effect that several bags of mail, bearing his brand, which had been carried from a junk a week previously, were delivered to a man or a woman, or a man and a woman, at the effect of a shot wound received in the left arm, in the late afternoon reported at No. 7 Police station.

The American community in Shanghai are signing a petition to the President of the United States who takes office in March, 1891, to the effect that the Chinese and English Bank, of which Mr. N. C. Daily was a member, should be allowed to do what was most gratifying not only to his own nation but without distinction to whatever country the members may be in, and we believe also to the local Chinese authorities.
